Dear Editor,

All this attention to terrorism from abroad just hides the fact that we have our own "domestic terrorism". For example, I have heard of some county Human Services being called "Inhuman Services", "Female Services", and "Dehumanising Services", all because of the lack of respect that public officials have had for those who need help. It has become a condition that our government is more interested in controlling the citizens, instead of serving the citizens.

When the poor report a crime to Law Enforcement officials, those authorities should not ignore, laugh at, or tell the witness to "go live somewhere else". It is not just the guilty who threaten, harass, or intimidate the witnesses, but those public officials with an attitude of "arrogant apathy" who abuse both the victim and the witness by not enforcing laws.

It is both the government, and the legal system, that is obstructing Justice by deciding when, where, and for whom, to enforce only specific laws.

The United States has entered it's own "Dark Ages".

Respectfully Submitted,
